THE INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF

Mental Health PROMOTION

Promoting mental health

Preventing mental disorders

The quarterly journal for all those with a clinical, professional, academic or personal interest in the field of mental health promotion

FOUNDATION

The International Journal of Mental Health Promotion is a unique journal which co-ordinates the dissemination of new research outcomes to programme developers and to all those who are involved in policy making and the implementation of mental health promotion and mental disorder prevention policies in local or national communities.

‘Helps untangle where we are and where we are going to.’

Mental Health Promotion Advisor

International coverage

Peer-reviewed by an expert international editorial board and other leading professionals in the field, the journal is an international information system to select, evaluate and disseminate models of good practice. In particular the journal:

- Provides an international forum for debate
- Identifies useful indicators for quality
- Includes features on accessible information systems supportive to practitioners and researchers
- Disseminates the results of scientific research.

The journal is essential reading for those with a clinical, professional, academic or personal interest in the area of promoting mental health and preventing mental disorder.

‘Research-based articles offer clear methods and strategies that can take Mental Health Promotion forward.’

Specialist Community Nurse Practitioner

Online Version for Corporate Subscribers

For an additional £25, corporate subscribers can now take advantage of the online electronic version of the Journal in addition to the paper copy. Alternatively, corporate subscribers may choose to subscribe to the electronic version only. See subscription form for full details of pricing.
